Insights

- Compliance and voluntary markets complement one another in the fight against climate change
- The voluntary carbon market is a crucial tool for funding natural climate solutions.
- An independent international governance body is necessary to oversee the integrity of the voluntary carbon market.
- Voluntary credits purchased by private companies do not have to go through the Article 6 system. Largely unregulated private schemes can still allow double counting without “corresponding adjustments”.
- Companies and countries should be cutting its own emissions under compliance markets (in line with science-based targets) while using high-quality voluntary carbon credits to compensate for residual emissions.
